Large numbers of friends visited the family at their residence, 1229 Eleventh street southeast, to-day.

Distribution of Carp.

Southeast, to-day.

Distribution of Carp.

The carp distribution season is nearly over and the work of distributing white fish has been commenced by the Fish Commission, a car load having been sent to Michigan last week. The commission has now on hand 680,000 Penobscot salmon eggs, 220,000 California trout eggs and 124,000 brook trout eggs. Two hundred thousand trout and 100,000 white fish have already been hatched. The Penobscot salmon eggs are of a beautiful pink color, and are kept in glass jars, through which they can be plainly seen.

A SPLENDID EXHIBIT

Of the Fishes and Fish Industry of America.

A very novel and attractive sight was presented at the National Museum last evening, the building being brilliantly il-luminated with electric lights, and several hundred prominent persons being present, hundred prominent persons being present, by invitation, to witness an exhibition of the contributions of the United States Fish Commission to the International Fish Exhibition to be held in London in May next. The collection is wonderfully complete, and the commission has accomplished the difficult object of Illustrating in the Most Satisfactory not only every species and variety of fish that frequent American waters, but also every device for their capture, transportation, preparation, preservation and propagation. The collection was commoneed on the 1st of last July, and has occupied not quite eight months, the work of boxing up commencing to-day. When ready for transportation the boxes will weigh some 750 tons, and the freight will cost about $10,000.

The immense collection occupied several of the large halls of the museum, and among the most attractive features was a collection of several thousand large photographs and crayon drawings, illustrating the methods of fishing for and preparing for market various classes of fishes, and illustrating every feature of the cod, menhaden, mackerel and shad fisheries.

A large number of live fishes were on exhibition and this collection was supplemented by hundreds of casts and drawings, life-size and in natural colors, showing

Every Species of American Fish Every Species of American Fish from the tiniest varieties to a good sized sperm whale.

The shell fish and marine wonders and curiosities were equally well represented, real specimens being shown wherever it was practicable and casts in other instances.

The infinite variety of oysters and eyster shells also formed an attractive feature. A complete promagnery tank and white ter shells also formed an attractive feature. A complete propagatory tank and white fish hatchery and the various stages of salmon hatching, from the spawning to the canning of the fish for market, were novel and interesting exhibits.

Several hundred perfect models of the vessels used in various parts of the country for fishing purposes were generally admired and were of striking interest and accuracy.

Among the important branches of the exhibition were the whale-fishing and the life-saving exhibits, and in both the implements, apparatus and processes were minutely and accurately represented. In the whale-fishing exhibit models of every class of whaling vessel and boat were exhibited, as were also all the designs of harpoons and weapons, the costumes of the men engaged in the industry, etc. In the life-saving service exhibit the life-saving stations, with their occupants and devices, were illustrated, and the life-saving implements, signals, clothing, etc., were exhibited.

To complete the collection, the various preparations of canned and potted fish were shown as well as an infinite variety of curiosities such as large stones, watches, etc., taken from the stomachs of fishes and the identical poker hand that was recently found in the stomach of a codfish. The exhibition

The old wives of society talked about the friendship exteting between the President and the wife of one of the Assistant Socretaries of State, until they had twisted a scandal out of it. His friend—the daughter of the first of the firs

The President was pleased, but he did not say anything, and the curtain rose immediately. Special Telegram to the Ploneer Press.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Two or three papers have within a few days published scandalous insignations about the President. They have not dared to go farther than to insignations about the President. They have not dared to go farther than to insignate the some attentions of the president has shown some attentions to the wife of an official bight none of the Departments, which, though eachierly unexceptionable as far as any one knows, have been enough to sea fire to make not send the formule good by the same time to the the farmed good by the same time to the the farmed good by the same the formule of make and female good by the same time to the farmed of the lady in question has been frequently stated. There have been unputed as a stated of the most intimate personal and official terms with the President. But the prominence of the parties has made the subject a fascinating one of certain persona, and so there have been unpiessant guesses and surmises passed around among the wives of officials at their receptions, and by their husbands related in the forces of the same personal and of the farmed and the with the prominence of the parties have come to fight, and nothing has occurred to strengthen suspicion, but at last in newspaper or two has published some vague allusions to the matter.

Pieneer Press, editorial.

And now the busy tongue of scandal at Washington is trifling with the reputation of no less a distinguished personage than the President of the United States, whose line of seefal conduct should certainly be above suspicion. The lady in the case is the daughter of a man in high official position, and her husband likewise. Unseasonable cails are said to be the foundation for this mischlevous rumor. There is probably not the smallest foundation for the seandalous inferences outside of the salacious imaginations of Washington mischlet-makers. A certain element in Washington society has been trying to hound the President into marriage ever since his elevation to office. Likely enough the story is part of the same social crusade. He is paying the penalty exacted of every rich and prominent bachelor or wildower to whom society's edict says: "Marry, or submit to be gossiped about." The whole business is intelerably offensive. It is about time that Washington had been fungated. A board of moral health should be appointed for the District of Columbia.

It is now said that the rocent scandal about the President, was started by the Star-Route ring, to divert attention from the developments that are being made against them in the court where they are upon trial. But it happens that the principal organ of this ring, at Washington, is the organ of the Administration as well. We do not know that it published the report, which was rife in Washington for a day or two; but the President should see to it that his organ is diversed from association with such a set, or diversed from association with such a set, or diverse the Administration from it. This last accomplished, the Washington Republican would have to be content with the championship of the cause of Billy Mahone.

Court, and Give Rail.

After the Grand Jury presented the indictments yesterday against the detectives and others, bench warrants were lessued and placed in the hands of the Marshal for service, except in the cases of Mr. Charles E. Flinders, private detective, George W. Manta and John E. Smith, and these were sent to the Fifth Precinct Station, as the individuals were real ents in that precince. Officer Breen subsequently arrested Mr. Flinders and carried him to the station, where Licutenant Arnold kindly permitted him the use of that officer's room for the night.

The others who had been members of the The others who had been members of the detective corps were not found at home, but it was pretty generally understood that they were in the city and evaded arrest only for the night that they might escape imprisonment in the station. As an evidence of the truth of this statement ex-Detective John W. Coomes walked to the courthouse this morning and delivered himself to the Marshal. Mesers, McElfresh and Miller had not reported when the court convoked.

Messrs, McElfresh and Miller had not reported when the court convened.
Shortly after Justice Wylle came on the bench in the Criminal Court this morning, Mr. Leigh Robinson appeared and asked that ball be fixed in the cases against Mr. Flinders.
District Attorney Corkhill asked that ball os set at $2,500.
